Fundamentals of Criminal Intelligence (AWR-315)

November 15-19, 2021

Course Description

This awareness-level course provides participants with the core capabilities required for participants from an all-crimes, all-hazards perspective. It encompasses traditional crimes and domestic and international acts of terrorism. This course introduces participants and distinguishes between intelligence and information. Among the topics covered are the Intelligence Community, responsibilities of participants, and goals and uses of criminal intelligence products. The potential range of customers and their needs are addressed. This course incorporates the five-step intelligence process and the importance of critical and creative thinking as it pertains to analysis of information and intelligence process. Participants will become familiar with the Information Sharing Environment, suspicious activity reporting, and legal authorities and guidance associated with criminal intelligence collection and use, including privacy, civil rights, and civil liberties law. Finally, this course addresses the benefits of forming strategic partnerships and collaborative networks. The goal of this course is to ensure participants leave equipped with the knowledge and skills to effectively participate in and contribute to the criminal intelligence enterprises within their agencies.
